

Jack Henry, Fincity Partner to Empower Community Financial Institutions with Open Banking Capabilities

May 5, 2021

- Fincity, a Mastercard Company, is an industry leader in financial data sharing, security, and standards that reaches more than 95% of U.S. financial accounts through connections with more than 10,000 financial institutions.
- Fincity's direct integration into the Banno Digital Platform provides more than 4.8 million consumers with safe, reliable control of their financial data and how it is accessed, allowing them to aggregate finances within community financial institutions.
- The integration will support Financial Data Exchange (FDX) standards, establishing broader industry alignment for open banking.

MONETT, Mo., May 5, 2021 /PRNewswire/ -- Jack Henry & Associates, Inc.[®] (NASDAQ: JKHY) is a leading provider of technology solutions and payment processing services primarily for the financial services industry. Jack Henry announced today that it has partnered with Fincity, a Mastercard[®] company.

Fincity's integration to the Banno Digital ToolkitSM enables community financial institutions to provide consumers with the freedom to control, access, and share their financial data, creating a real-time picture of their financial health. The more than 400 community financial institutions using the Banno Digital Platform will be able to deliver this holistic financial experience to consumers through secure API access to third-party financial institutions, fintechs and financial partners of their choice at zero lift and zero cost.

Steve Smith, Head of Global Open Banking at Mastercard and CEO of Fincity, commented, "At its core, open banking is a philosophy centered on empowering the consumer – as a result, it elevates the position of the financial institution providing the access. Fincity and Jack Henry share a goal of providing the industry with open banking standards that enable consumers to access, use, and benefit from their financial data. As highly regulated and highly connected companies, we're in a position to help consumers make more informed financial decisions and improve their financial health."

Fincity is a founding member of FDX, a nonprofit organization dedicated to unifying the financial industry around a common, interoperable and royalty-free standard for the secure access of consumer-permissioned financial data. Jack Henry joined FDX to support the standard through this integration with Fincity and throughout more of the Banno Digital Toolkit. Smith added, "Our FDX-compliant integration with Jack Henry encourages safe and open access to data for the industry at large. The association needs adoption by leaders like Jack Henry in order to change the ecosystem, and we're proud to be partnered with them under these standards."

Ben Metz, head of digital at Jack Henry, said, "Jack Henry has a great and longstanding relationship with Mastercard, and partnering with Fincity was a natural choice. The open banking standards that we're building with partnerships like this will position community financial institutions to deliver a first-app experience for consumers to manage all of their finances. The financial services industry is changing at a rate that no single organization alone can meet, which is why opening a bank or credit union's digital experience to include all a consumer's financial connections positions community financial institutions to be the mainstay in a complex and competitive environment."

Metz continued, "We believe banks and credit unions can offer the financial wallet that aggregates all of a consumer's financial experiences in one place; community financial institutions can be the epicenter of financial transactions. These open banking standards allow them to access consumer data from exterior financial relationships in one place, and then provide personal service in context at the moment of need. This combination is a competitive differentiator that no one else provides."
